413, 405 involved in Miss Ally SAR effort

Managing editor

Search and rescue crews from 14 Wing Greenwood, the Canadian and American Coast Guards, Department of Fisheries and a number of smaller vessels ceased a search for the Miss Ally, after the search and rescue region commander granted a search reduction February 19. A search reduction results when all probable chances for survival are exhausted.

The men - Katlin Nickerson, Tyson Townsend, Joel Hopkins and Steve Cole Nickerson of Woods Harbour; and Billy Hatfield of Cape Sable Island - were aboard the Miss Ally, a 45-foot fishing boat out of Woods Harbour, which sent out an emergency signal at 11 p.m. February 17.

The Joint Rescue Coordination Centre in Halifax responded to the call, approximately 120 kilometres southeast of Liverpool, with its search and rescue resources. Crews covered more than 7,000 square miles of ocean off the south shore of Nova Scotia, using a Royal Canadian Air Force CH-149 Cormorant helicopter. CC-130 Hercules aircraft, and CP-140 Aurora aircraft from 14 Wing; as well as the Canadian Coast Guard ships William Alexander and Earl Grey. A first light.

Department of Fisheries and Oceans contracted aircraft, operated by Provincial Airlines, two United States Coast Guard aircraft as well as various merchant vessels were also involved in the search.

Warrant Officer Conrad Cowan, 413 (Search and Rescue) Squadron was called into the search with his stand-by crew February 18 around 6:30 a.m. Personnel were already heading into work, so were on deck within minutes. Their Cormorant left for the scene and spent a total of 10.2 hours in the air, with two trips to Shearwater to refuel.

"We saw the two Coast Guards ships in the vicinity of the overturned vessel, and there was a debris field running with the current - as a searcher, that's a good sign," Cowan said. "We started our search pattern, working in and picking up things.'

Cowan said the sea state was the worst he's seen while posted at 14 Wing: 10 metre rollers, waves cresting over each other, snow squalls and a low ceiling. He credited the helicopter's flying crew for "holding it together."

A second Cormorant left Greenwood when Cowan's returned that evening, and a third trip went back out to the search area February 19 at we were really feeling anxious heading out there. We rehearsed a rescue on the way, hoping we'd have a life raft and be able to do a cable and lift - that's what we were all hoping for. We were really, really hoping to find someone."

Captain Michael Austin, 405 Squadron, 14 Wing, said the Aurora was on duty close to seven hours, including halfan-hour of flying time both to and from the search area. While it is not common for Auroras to be involved with SAR, crews are trained and the plane is equipped with a SKAD (Sea Kit Air Droppable) unit, which includes two life rafts connected by buoyant rope and other supplies. The 13-member crew manned conducted visual searches into Monday night, and also used the plane's radar - "but it is difficult when you are looking for a dinghy," he acknowledged, in the expanse of ocean being searched and its stormy condition. The crew did not see anything, although it was able to track an emergency signal for a period.

By 6 p.m. February 19, responders determined any hope of the men's survival had diminished significantly due to careful consideration of the call and survivability models. Search time was well beyond estimated cold water immersion survival times.

The matter was turned over to RCMP as a recovery operation and missing persons case,

Cadets, careers and choices

Sara Keddy, Managing editor

Eric Belanger hasn't thought too far ahead yet, but his experience as a member of the 517 F/Lt Graham Air Cadets could sure help.

Close to 110 of the group's Cadets were sent through a career showcase February 13 at their Birchall Centre meeting space, word scramble in hand: by asking questions of visiting working professionals, they would be given a letter that could hold the key to not only a secret phrase, but also inspiration for their future.

"I don't know for sure," Belanger, age 12, said. "I kind of want to work on a Cormorant like my dad does."

Cadet squadron Commanding Officer Major William Montgomery said, while Cadets have "no obligation" to go into the military, "there are basic skills learned in Cadets

- public speaking, standing up and putting thoughts together - that stay with you all vour life."

He knows all too well how hard it can be to make life decisions: when he went to Acadia University for an arts degree, "they wanted me to pick a major - I didn't want

Being exposed to a variety of opportunities - like what was on offer at the career night this evening – is what Montgomery himself was looking for.

"We wanted a range of programs and people, and the feedback from people coming here has been good."

Invited guests included a number of 14 Wing Greenwood professionals, from Canadian Forces search and rescue technicians to a civilian worker with health promotion; media – radio and print, paramedics, dental professionals, photographers and more.

« Je ne savais vraiment pas », racontait Jim Irvine le 13 février « que je venais de me joindre au meilleur programme de développement de carrière au Canada. »

Même si le Col Irvine a admis que sa première expérience à bord d'un petit avion a été plutôt retournante, il a trouvé son créneau dans la Force aérienne en tant que pilote de divers aéro-

Le Col Irvine a demandé au groupe quel genre de leçons de leadership les ieunes devraient tenter d'apprendre.

"I can tell you for a fact, I would not be here today if it wasn't for the Air Cadet organization, and the influence of Cadet officers and civilian instructors just like you have."

What kind of leadership lessons should young people be focusing on learning, Irvine asked the group.

"The first, most important thing about leading is knowing how to follow. Taking orders, knowing what the goal is and listening to superiors – then, lead your peers and follow on. If you can't follow, you can't lead well."

Working as a team in any environment is crucial "your entire life," Irvine said: "the sum of the parts is much greater than working on your

Transformational leadership is also a challenge: yelling at people, Irvine said, to get them to get things done, means they won't respect you.

"Working with people you also want to be friends with, you have to convince them of what the right thing to do is - that's the best kind of leadership."

All of that comes from solid roots in early success. Irvine said challenges and new lessons – learning how to survive in winter, fly, compete in drill exercises, be away from home for weeks at a time at a young age – all showed he could do it.

"Self-reliance, relying on your training, understanding you can do it - you can conquer your fear when you're young."

Turning those lessons – and even dreams - into a career involves consideration of what you want, and what you need.

"Money is important," Irvine said. "You want a good lifestyle, a home and to be able to provide for your kids. But – it's not the most important thing.

"Find something you love, something you can get up in the morning and say, 'Man, I don't have a lot of money - but this is fun."

Tracy Chisholm says her volunteer time on a Habitat for Humanity build in Haiti last fall was an eye-opening experience as to the importance of home.

Building a future House becomes a home with volunteer hands

Sara Keddy, Managing editor

Tracy Chisholm's inexperienced efforts to hang drywall or build basement steps as part of a Habitat for Humanity team add up.

"You realize you have something to contribute you're providing a foundation for a house, but also for a future.'

Chisholm is a software system specialist with 14 Wing Greenwood's simulator at 404 Squadron, and she's putting more and more nails into Habitat for Humanity Habitat for Humanity was the Valley.

"The need is greater there, but the fact people are in more dire straits doesn't change the fact there are issues with housing here - mould, leaks, security, housing situations that are not OK - it's not a competition to see who's worse off," she says.

Her first experience with projects – around the world – in Montreal 10 years ago. as she more fully appreciates when her workplace spent what the organization means. a Saturday volunteering at In Honduras and Haiti, a safe, a housing project. Home secure, solid home is one in Nova Scotia on vacation thing; it means something more recently, she spent else in recent builds here in two-and-a-half weeks helping at a four-home build in Lower Sackville. Eighty per cent of the volunteers on the site were women, and she says the experience was "really great.

"It showed me I can do this."

Chisholm signed up for an international project in Honduras, where volunteers worked alongside a "beautiful family" to build a home. She continued to help out in Montreal, and then was happy to find a year-old Habitat for Humanity chapter in the Valley when she started work in Greenwood last year. The Valley chapter had just finished its first home in Wolfville, and is now ready to build another this summer in New Minas. Chisholm has signed on as the group's secretary and build committee vice-chairman.

"A safe home is something don't have one."

these people would never have been able to have, and it changes things for the family for the long run.

"I've realized how important it is to have a home from which to go forward every day, and then come back to. Every creature on Earth needs a home – but so many people

Add experience, expertise to the next build

Canadian Forces personnel moving across Canada - and beyond - may be in a unique position to know just how important a home is.

That's what makes them valuable volunteers at a Habitat for Humanity build project.

"They come, they work hard, they clean up and go home," says Tracy Chisholm, a 14 Wing Greenwood civilian worker.

"The support of the base is really tremendously helpful" as the Valley Habitat for Humanity chapter gets set for its second build. Project administrator and fundraising chairwoman Belinda Manning says crews from 14 Wing Greenwood helping at last year's first Valley build "worked their butts off.

"And then some of them came to the dedication ceremony with the family, and it was really great to see them - what a huge accomplishment!"

Anyone interested in pitching in as the project digs in this spring is encouraged to contact Habitat for Humanity, habitat.av@ gmail.com. Manning says build volunteers are always needed but, to get to that point, the
