Six Royal Canadian Navy warships have sailed from Halifax to participate in a task group exercise off the Canadian Atlantic coast November 25 to December 6.

"This task group exercise will have the added value of being a part of NORAD Exercise Amalgam Dart, proving interoperability between the Royal Canadian Navy, the Royal Canadian Air Force and the U.S. Air Force," said Rear-Admiral John Newton, Commander Maritime Forces Atlantic.

RCN units participating include Her Majesty's Canadian ships Iroquois, Ville de Québec, Halifax, Fredericton and Kingston; and Her Majesty's Canadian submarine Windsor. The ships will be supported by CH124 Sea King helicopters from 12 Wing Shearwater.

The Royal Canadian Air Force will participate December 3 to 5 with a CC130 Hercules from 8 Wing Trenton, a CP140 Aurora long-range patrol aircraft from 14 Wing Greenwood and CF188 Hornets from 3 Wing Bagotville, augmented by personnel from 22 Wing North Bay.

on the Parks Canada designated areas of beach," said SAR-Tech Master Corporal Kent Stanway.

With Sable Island now Canada's 43rd national park, expecting an influx of visitors, it was important to test all stakeholders' concepts of emergency response and enhance interoperability, flight planning, situational awareness and decision-making processes.

"Placing pre-disaster planning at the forefront is an important component of pre-disaster implementation. It involves exercising the plan and training staff for their respective disaster roles. The disaster recovery literature clearly demonstrates populations that are better prepared recover more quickly," said Warrant Officer Conrad Cowan, SAR-Tech leader.

Operational advantages extended throughout a range of operations during this exercise: aircrews used their flight planning and oil rig platform landings to mutual air support across ocean expanses; the SAR-Techs made efficient and effective use of disaster and emergency best practices; and, Parks Canada will develop a more sustainable and disaster-resilient island, atmospheric monitoring station and staff.

14 Wing Information Line

14 Wing Greenwood has established a Wing Information Line at 765-1765 local 1765.

The Wing Information Line will advise callers on the current status of 14 Wing during extreme weather activity, which will enable personnel to determine the current wing manning status (normal, minimum or essential personnel only). The information line will also advise which access gates may be closed to allow for the clearing of roads and parking lots.

This service is provided through an auto attendant recording, which will be updated as required. A recorded message stating "Operations Normal" indicates 14 Wing is functioning under standard practices.

Other recorded messages will detail any changes to the wing status.

Ligne d'information de la 14e Escadre

La 14e Escadre Greenwood a établi une ligne d'information sur l'Escadre dont le numéro est le 765-1765 poste 1765.

La ligne d'information renseignera sur la situation de la 14e Escadre lors de conditions météorologiques extrêmes, ce qui permettra au personnel de connaître le niveau de dotation courant de l'Escadre (normal, minimal ou personnel essentiel seulement). Elle indiquera également les barrières qui pourraient être fermées pour permettre le déneigement des routes et des terrains de stationnement.

Ce service est offert par le standard téléphonique automatisé sous la forme d'un message enregistré qui sera mis à jour selon le besoin. Le message enregistré disant « Opérations normales » indique que la 14e Escadre fonctionne normalement. Les autres messages préciseront tout changement apporté à la situation de l'Escadre.

Stay safe when winter driving

As winter arrives, 14 Wing Greenwood defence team members are reminded weather and road conditions can quickly become unpredictable and 31 Military Police Flight would like to remind motorists to stay alert, slow down - and stay in control.

Clear your vehicle of snow and ice, from all windows, lights and the roof. This will ensure better visibility for the driver, and prevent flying snow from obstructing the sight of other drivers.

If you become stuck or stranded, it is important to remember.

- Don't panic. Stay with your vehicle for warmth and safety. Contact emergency services for help.
- If you have to get out of your vehicle while on a busy road, do so using the door away from traffic, if possible.
- Draw attention to your vehicle by using traffic cones, flares or a "Call Police" sign. Use your motor sparingly. For fresh air, open a window away from the wind. Periodically check your exhaust pipe to ensure snow has not piled around it.

- If you attempt to free your vehicle, do so safely. Do not over exert yourself. Clothes are warmest when dry; over exerting yourself will cause your clothes to become damp with perspiration.
- In blizzard conditions, ensure one person in the vehicle stays awake. Help may take a long time to arrive.

Another great idea is to have a winter maintenance check-up done on your vehicle, including having your tires checked. Keep your vehicle's fuel tank above half full throughout the winter in order to better deal with any emergencies that may arise.

Above all, drive according to the weather and road conditions for the best chance of having a safe and enjoyable winter season.

Modern art showcases LRP advancements in OP MOBILE

Sara Keddy, Managing editor

The face of 14 Wing Greenwood's modern long range patrol work can now be seen as part of the art collection held by the Greenwood Military Aviation Museum.

The Greenwood Art Association recently presented a painting commemorating the 2011 deployment of the Royal Canadian Air Force with Operation MOBILE, the United Nations action in Libya. Major Derrick Hotte, an air combat systems officer with Long Range Patrol SET, is profiled in the work as the detachment commander for Rotation 0. Greenwood supplied subsequent rotations 405 and 14 Air Maintenance squadrons, Wing Operations, Wing Administration and Wing Logistics and Engineering.

"We received word something was coming on a Friday, we started planning to go on Sunday and we got word Thursday – 'You're going, and you're going today," Hotte says of the move to get the Canadian contingent in the air. "We took off and we didn't even know where we were going to land until we were halfway across the Atlantic."

From there, Hotte led a just-established deployment mission support centre into operational readiness in less than two days. The Canadian of dozens of personnel from crews went on to conduct 181 surveillance and reconnaissance missions totalling over 1,400 flight hours over the next seven months. The work challenged - and changed the capabilities of the CP140 Auroras, moving the aircraft, its technologies and crew from traditional maritime patrol flights to covering 800 kilometres of Libyan coastline to complete never done before overland mission work.

> "We were evolving day by day and adapting new mission sets – professionalism made that happen," says Hotte, describing the traditional complexity of skills needed to conduct anti-submarine warfare that allows personnel to be

Medal makes round the world trip for presentation

Sara Keddy, Managing editor

Flight Lieutenant Adam Saber, Royal Australian Air Force, was surprised during his escort duties during a 14 Wing Greenwood visit by RAAF Wing Commander Russell Page with a reminder of his "Down Under" service.

Page, the Australian Air Attache in Ottawa, was in Greenwood November 21 to see more of the P3 Orion aircraft - known as the Royal Canadian Air Force's Aurora, and compare its long range patrol work to his own nation's. Saber, an exchange pilot and crew commander with 14 Wing's 405 (Long Range Patrol) Squadron, toured Page around the base, squadron and aircraft.

"Australia has a little bit of a problem of people coming over the ocean and 'visiting' us," Page said, describing the waves of illegal immigration and refugees that attempt to reach the Australian coast.

"We have now had a 10border protection mission, Operation Resolute, and the P3s have been heavily involved. We go out, we find

Because of the decadelong demands on the P3 fleet, the Australian government created the Operational Service Medal to mark the professional contributions of its military personnel.

For the static display, 405 ties that included a visit to the LRP Squadron provided a hospital by members of the Block II Aurora. In addition, the static display also consisted of a CF18 from 425 Squadron in Bagotville, a CT155 Hawk from 15 Wing Moose Jaw, and a CH146 Griffon from Petawawa. Airplane rides were provided by members of the Windsor Flying Club, which had over a dozen aircraft flying nonstop until the weather closed in.

> The event was a huge success. Close to 400 people were in attendance, and the 405 crew was kept busy answering questions and showing people around the aircraft. It was clear the strong Royal Canadian Air Force presence was greatly appreciated. All of the RCAF members who participated in the event were appreciative of the warm welcome given by the organizers and visitors.

Malcolm Uhlman, Greenwood Military Aviation Museum

Nestled behind the CH113 Labrador helicopter, CT133 Silver Star jet trainer/combat support aircraft and the CP107 Argus aircraft, the QUAD radar display is the latest addition to the Greenwood Military Aviation Museum's air park. The control panel and display scope unit is on display inside the museum.

The Quad radar was so-called because it was capable of four functions: aircraft height finding, air surveillance, aircraft ground control approach (GCA) - providing the pilot direction, height and distance; and airport surveillance detection. The only two functions used by the RCAF were GCA and air surveillance. QUAD radars were designed as air traffic control units that could be moved wherever needed - important during crises and war.

The QUAD radar replaced the vintage NPEN 11 radar used during the Second World War, which was, interestingly, relied upon during the Berlin Airlift in 1948 and 1949. During the early period of QUAD radar use, navigation aids were primitive and often degraded by bad weather - when precision was most required – and fuel reserves were often less than desired. To pilots, GCA was a God send! Not only were the controllers outstanding in every aspect of handling regular and emergency approaches, but they also had calm, reassuring voices that instantly settled the nerves of the most frightened pilot. And, in Canada's worst weather, few pilots were always fearless. It would be difficult to assess the numbers of lives and aircraft saved by GCA controllers, but the number would be very high.

The latest addition to the Greenwood Military Aviation Museum's Air Park is the retired QUAD Radar.

Museum curator Bryan Nelson was an air traffic control technician at Greenwood when the QUAD radar was first installed in the early 1960s. One fond memory of Nelson's was how much easier the QUAD system was to adjust when it was necessary to change runways. And, from Chuck Tringle (Royal Canadian Air Force retired: "this thing demanded numerous maintenance hours and lots of TLC because it was old technology during the period while the new Precision Approach Radar (PAR) was being built."

Today, Greenwood has a state-of-the-art PAR, which caused the obsolescence of the QUAD radar in the summer of 2012.

CAF send two athletes to Japanese surf rescue challenge

Captain Dugald Thomson, ADAC

Having endured a long season of training and competition, veteran Canadian Armed Forces CISM swimmers Captain Stephanie Dennis (405 Squadron, Greenwood) and Captain Dugald Thomson (ADAC, Halifax), would normally look forward to a short, end-of-season break after having completed the final swimming event on this year's CAF calendar, the 2013 CISM Lifesaving Championships in Amsterdam.

However, rest would have to wait: both were approached by Lifesaving Canada to join the national team in competing against some of the world's top lifesaving athletes at the 2013 Australia, New Zealand and Sanyo International Surf Rescue Challenge September 19 through 23 in Onjuku Beach, Chiba prefecture, Japan.

Supported through PSP's Out Service Competition program, the pair began the journey with a trans-Pacific flight to Tokyo that crossed 12 time zones. Both having flown long range patrol on the CP140 Aurora, they were unfazed and jet-lag free, and met the Canadian team to complete the trip to Onjuku Beach, three the Pacific Ocean.

Lifesaving sport may not be widely recognized in Canada. possibly due to its laughable "beach season," but in more sun-friendly nations such as Japan, it is a popular sport which attracts strong competitors with backgrounds in swimming, paddling, board sports and running. They compete in events ranging from beach flags (a 20 metre sprint inspired by musical chairs) to ironman (a gruelling 400 metre swim, 600 metre board and 800 metre surf ski, each interspersed by 150 metre runs). The format of the Sanyo sees each nation entering two competitors in every event. hours by bus east of Tokyo on and only the top finisher from each nation earns points for his or her country. No individual awards are presented; rather. competitors contribute points towards their country's total.

Drawing on their strengths

Captain Dugald Thomson (left) was one of two Canadian Armed Forces athletes participating in the 2013 Sanyo International Surf Rescue Challenge in Japan. Submitted as swimmers. Dennis and Thomson were employed by the Canadian team as the designated swimmers, competing in the surf race, the mixed surf relay, the swimming leg of the ironman relay, the swimming leg of the board relay and the towing leg of the rescue tube relay. Each competed in more than 15 races over the course of the four-day event, and represented the Canadian Armed Forces admirably, finishing as and competing closely with American and Hong Kong athletes for team points behind Australian, New Zealand and Japanese powerhouses.

Aside from the thrill of toplevel competition, the camaraderie and friendships sparked with athletes from across the globe, the racing experience to draw upon in future competitions and the excitement of seeing a new and exotic land; of pride.

the top Canadian swimmers the highlight for Dennis and Thomson was the opportunity to wear the Canadian uniform and represent Canada on a global stage. Servicemen and women may often find themselves taking for granted the honour bestowed upon them on a daily basis: to wear the Canadian flag and represent this country for those at home and those who have come before. Here's How It Works: Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
